

Sex offender registries destroy families, devastate children, inspire murderers

written by NARSOL | August 28, 2015

By Steve Yoder . . . This compelling piece begins with the story of a husband and father of three who goes home after work, helps with dinner, helps put the children to bed – but then leaves at 9:30 to drive to a “safe” location to sleep in his van. He is on the public sex offender registry for a crime committed when he was 23, and Florida law prohibits him living—which translates to being there from 10 pm to 6 am—within 1000 feet of schools, parks, and other places where children frequent. Trying to find a place to live together as a family in a non-restricted area has proven, thus far, impossible. \(Read full article in Aljazeera America\)
