

NARSOL launches new, independent resources website

written by admin | July 17, 2020

NARSOL is proud to announce the launching of a new resource website. This is a stand-alone site, separate from our main site but accessible from it as well as independently.

For the techies out there, it is a wiki-powered website driven by a powerful set of relational databases on the back-end, which allows for easy updating, link-checking, and sorting/grouping of data. It won't get bogged down under its own weight due to site complexity, constant re-design, and outdated links or information.

This is the result of NARSOL listening to what our members and affiliates told us they wanted. While they were generally cheered by NARSOL's legal successes in the courts, they really wanted to see more resources that would help them in their day-to-day struggles surviving and coping with life on the registry. A court case half-way across the country might sometimes be a little abstract for them, but finding a good job, housing, or a support group was often a very concrete
